Requiring Signature On Lottery Ticket Protects You, Your Employees And Your Customers

With the record-setting sales of lottery tickets this year comes this security reminder: During recent anonymous checks at retail locations by Iowa Lottery security personnel, there was a downturn in the number of store personnel who required a signature on a lottery ticket before they scanned or cashed it. The lottery is reminding its retailers of the signature requirement, which ultimately provides protection for the business involved as well as its employees and customers.

The requirement that a lottery ticket be signed before a retail employee checks or cashes it was established as rule in 2008 in Iowa. At that time and in the years since, there have been repeated incidents in other states of retail employees stealing customers’ lottery tickets and later trying to claim the prizes involved as their own. Some of the most high-profile cases in Texas and California have generated international headlines from the time of the initial theft reports through the court proceedings that followed.

The Iowa Lottery has conducted repeated security-compliance checks at hundreds of Iowa retail locations during the past four years and there is good news here in our state: To date, all winning tickets presented during the unannounced checks by lottery investigators and agents from the Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation have been paid appropriately by store personnel. What has been revealed is a retail system that is functioning well, but there is room for improvement as we remain vigilant in our procedures to guard against the problems experienced in other states with lottery-ticket redemption.

Requiring that a player sign a lottery ticket before you or your staff will scan or cash it provides protection for your business, your employees and the customer involved. A signature on a lottery ticket brings consumer protection by identifying that ticket as belonging to that person. And just as importantly, it provides protection for the business involved should questions later arise.

“Bottomline, the easiest way for consumers to protect themselves is by signing their tickets as soon as they are purchased,” said Steve Bogle, the Lottery’s Vice President of Security.

The signature requirement is contained in the lottery’s licensing terms and conditions under paragraph 15, which states: “Retailers shall verify there is a signature on any ticket(s) submitted for checking or validation.”

Bogle said that as the lottery moves forward with its security-compliance program, those locations that have repeatedly failed to require customers to sign their lottery tickets will receive letters of warning from the lottery as well as visits from lottery personnel who can discuss the ticket-signature requirements with them. Continued failure to require signatures may result in further penalties, but Bogle is hopeful that by working with the retailers and Lottery sales personnel, these types of consequences can be avoided.

The theft of Iowa Lottery products is a Class D felony as defined in Iowa Code Chapter 99G.36, punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine between $750 and $7,500. Anyone who has a concern about the Iowa Lottery, its products or operations should contact the lottery at 515-725-7900 or e-mail the lottery at Wmaster@ialottery.com. Security-related concerns should go directly to the Lottery Security Division at 515-725-7900.
