Did you know? Fun facts about Iowa Legislators

The first session of Iowa's 86th General Assembly opened Monday, Jan. 12, in a ceremonial tone typical of the legislature. Amidst the formalities, members of both the House of Representatives and the Senate were selected for leadership roles and the parties outlined their priorities for the session (see page 4 of this publication for additional details).

Many of the introductory remarks included references to bipartisanship, which was a major theme of Governor Terry Branstad's Condition of the State Address on Tuesday.

During the speech to members of Iowa's legislative and judicial branches, as well as a number of distinguished guests and the media, Gov. Branstad presented his administration's plan to focus on improving the state's infrastructure; create safe and secure schools and communities; revitalize parks, trails and museums; and increase government transparency.

Of particular interest to advocates for older Iowans were the governor's remarks regarding the strengthening of Iowa's domestic abuse laws and the implementation of the IowaNext Plan, which seeks to help employers attract workers to Iowa by investing in quality of life initiatives across the state.

Iowa's Domestic Abuse Act defines domestic abuse to include assault between family or household members who live together or have lived together within the past year. This definition is important, as most cases of elder abuse are perpetrated by others the older adult knows and trusts – particularly family members – according to the National Center on Elder Abuse. Potential changes to Iowa's domestic abuse laws could impact the manner in which cases of elder abuse are addressed.

Increasing the safety and well-being of older Iowans complements Gov. Branstad's IowaNext Plan, which strives to make Iowa the premier state in which to live and retire. An investment in Iowa's parks, trails, lakes, museums and other recreational facilities will benefit all Iowans, including those over the age of 65 who make up more than 15 percent of the state's population.

The Iowa Department on Aging looks forward to bringing readers continued coverage of the 2015 Legislative Session.

SENATOR ERNST TO DELIVER GOP STATE OF THE UNION REBUTTAL

Freshman U.S. Senator Joni Ernst of Iowa has been chosen to deliver the Republican party's rebuttal speech to President Barack Obama's State of the Union Address tonight, Jan. 20.

In announcing their selection of Sen. Ernst, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., and House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, emphasized her commitment to creating jobs and strengthening the economy and suggested her remarks would focus on GOP efforts to address the needs of middle-class families.

The only other Iowan to ever give the opposition party's rebuttal to the State of the Union Address was Sen. Tom Harkin 1984 after President Ronald Reagan's speech.

Condition of the Judiciary Address includes nod to guardianship roles

In his Condition of the Judiciary Address on Jan. 14, Iowa Supreme Court Chief Justice Mark Cady talked about improving Iowa's judicial system to reduce racial disparities, increase courthouse security and digitalize the court's legal documents.

The speech, given to a joint session of the Iowa Legislature, also pointed out recent improvement to the state's juvenile court system, family treatment courts and civil litigation system and included a nod to the emerging role that guardians and conservators play in helping Iowa's most vulnerable populations, including older adults, access justice.

With a goal of developing improvements and new safeguards for the services provided to Iowans who need help making decisions regarding their personal care, safety or finances, Chief Justice Cady announced, "We are convening a commission of experts to review existing guardianship and conservatorship laws and procedures."

"Right now," he explained, "our court system oversees more than 22,000 active guardianship or conservatorship cases. Each person in each case deserves the best care possible. The project is under the leadership of Justice Bruce Zager of Waterloo, and the task force will include faculty from Iowa's two outstanding law schools."

As the Iowa Department on Aging continues to advocate on behalf of older adults' access to and awareness of substitute decision makers and strives to implement standards across the state that ensure the quality of services provided, Chief Justice Cady's call for a guardianship/conservatorship reform committee will be something worth watching this session.
