Third draft of Iowa's ESSA plan released for public review Iowans invited to comment through September 11; plan will be final next month

Iowa Department of Education Director Ryan Wise has announced that the third draft of Iowa's state plan for meeting the federal Every Student Succeeds Act is available for public review and comment. Iowa's plan will be finalized and submitted to the U.S. Department of Education in September. "Iowa has several collaborative education improvement efforts underway, each with a goal of preparing students for success in high school and beyond, and the Every Student Succeeds Act is an opportunity to connect and build on those efforts," Wise said. "We've made great strides in designing a plan that makes sense for our state, and this is a final opportunity for Iowans to review this plan."

Read a snapshot of the plan here.

ESSA is a reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. This update replaces the No Child Left Behind Act. Under ESSA, Iowa and other states must develop state plans that address student assessments, school accountability, funding, and support for struggling schools.

The third draft released today incorporates feedback on the second draft, released in June. The third draft includes the following changes to an accountability index, or series of measures that will be used to identify schools in need of improvement (see pages ix and x for a complete summary of plan revisions):

- A postsecondary readiness measure will remain part of the accountability index, but Iowa needs time to develop the right measure. Accordingly, the Department will convene a work group during the 2017-18 school year to develop a postsecondary readiness measure to be phased in starting in the 2018-19 school year.
- A measure of school climate and culture, called conditions for learning, will carry a smaller weight in the accountability index (5 percent) during the 2017-18 school year while the measure is fully developed. This measure relies on surveys of students, school employees and parents -- as well as data such as student suspensions -- to measure a school's safety, engagement and environment.

In developing the draft ESSA plan, department leaders have sought input through 18 public forums statewide, an advisory committee, focus groups, education work teams, and written comments.

A final state plan will be submitted to the U.S. Department of Education by September 18. The plan will be revised and updated in years to come.

Iowans are invited to give feedback on the third draft in an online feedback survey, which is open through September 11.

Feedback also can be submitted via email at ESSA@iowa.gov or by mail: Iowa Department of Education, Attn: Deputy Director David Tilly/ESSA Feedback, Grimes State Office Building, 400 E. 14th St., Des Moines, IA 50319-0146

Car Safety Checklist for Parents and Providers in the Summer (Federal Office of Child Care)

Heatstroke is one of the leading causes of death among children, as they are more vulnerable to heatstroke than adults. As we have seen by statistics gathered over the past 20 years, even great parents can forget a child in the backseat of a car. Although parents and caregivers need to be vigilant about leaving children alone in cars—for any number of reasons, for any amount of time, and at any time of the year—they need to be extra vigilant in the summer months. Bystanders can also help protect other children if they see a child alone in a car.

You can review an important checklist of things to do to prevent a child from suffering heatstroke after being left alone in a hot car at this website. Keep your children, as well as other children under your care, safe this summer!

Talk, Read, and Sing Together Every Day!

Research has found that providing children from birth to five with consistent, language-rich experiences—such as talking, reading, and singing—can have important benefits on their brain development and future school success. However, many families lack access to the types of resources that can help them make the most of these language building experiences. This creates a gap in the quantity and quality of words that children learn, which directly impacts their opportunities to succeed in school and later in life. These tip sheets, available in English and Spanish, have been designed specifically for families, caregivers, and early educators. They can help enrich a child’s early language experiences by providing research-based tips for talking, reading, and singing with young children every day beginning from birth. Sample topics include It’s Never Too Early to Help Your Child Learn – Talk, Read, and Sing Together Every Day, Tips for Using Language at Home and in the Community, and The Benefits of Being Bilingual. <https://www.ed.gov/early-learning/talk-read-sing>

Parent Engagement Practices Improve Outcomes for Preschool Children

This research brief made available by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation is one of a series of briefs on research, practice and policy relating to social and emotional learning. This brief focuses on parent engagement models that have been found to improve school readiness outcomes.

Providing parents with support and guidance in the use of home learning materials and warm, responsive parenting skills, while also providing opportunities for parents to get involved at school, using conferences and/or home visits to support parent-teacher communication and collaboration are keys elements, the report states. Evidence also suggests effective parent engagement must be intensive and strategic, considerably longer and more involved than the kinds of parent engagement practices that are widespread in preschools now.

Which States are Leading on Early Childhood Leaders?

What do California, Illinois, and Pennsylvania have in common? Sure, they all have large populations and cities with dedicated baseball fans. But according to the McCormick Center for Early Childhood Leadership’s recently released L.E.A.D. Early Childhood Clearinghouse, they are also leading the nation in policies to support early education leaders. The Clearinghouse gives a snapshot of the current landscape for center directors, school principals, and family child care providers. This comprehensive resource provides data on state leader policies, compensation, higher education program offerings, and more.

The Smart Start (North Carolina) Resource Guide of Evidence-Based and Evidence-Informed Programs and Practices

“Across the nation there is an increasing focus on the use of evidence-based practices.[1] This movement is across federal agencies such as the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA),[2] and the Department of Education,[3] as well as across various fields such as medicine, mental health, and early childhood[4-6]. Research and practice in the field of early childhood are growing to help professionals provide the best services possible to produce real change.

“This guide is intended to provide the research evidence for programs and practices most commonly funded by Smart Start partnerships and primary evidence-based early childhood programs.

“Although this is not a “how-to” guide for doing community planning and systems building, program development, program implementation, and evaluation, these are essential elements for successful services.”

Is subsidized childcare associated with lower risk of grade retention for low-income children?: Evidence from Child Care and Development Fund administrative records linked to the American Community Survey

This study investigates whether low-income young children's experience of Child Care and Development Fund (CCDF)-subsidized childcare is associated with a lower subsequent likelihood of being held back in grades K-12. High-quality childcare has been shown to improve low-income children's school readiness. However, no previous study has examined the link specifically between subsidized care and grade retention. I do so here by matching information on children from CCDF administrative records to later observations of the same children in the American Community Survey (ACS). I use logistic regression to compare the likelihood of grade retention between CCDF-recipient children and non-recipient children who also appear in the ACS in the years 2008-2014 (N=2,284,857). I find strong evidence for an association between CCDF-subsidized care and lower risk of grade retention, especially among non-Hispanic Black children and Hispanic children. I also find evidence that receiving CCDF-subsidized center-based care in particular is associated with a lower risk of being held back than CCDF-subsidized family daycare, babysitter care, or relative care, again with the largest apparent benefit to non-Hispanic Black children and Hispanic children.
