September is National PREPAREDNESS Month

As we've seen recently from the countless news stories and pictures of the damages caused by Hurricanes Harvey on the Texas gulf coast and Irma in the Caribbean and Florida, disasters have a significant impact on children, families, businesses and communities.

September is National PREPAREDNESS Month. The theme for this year is, "Disasters Don't Plan Ahead. You Can." Encourage families you work with to do three simple steps to be better prepared:

- Make a family emergency plan
- Build an emergency supply kit
- Become more aware of the local hazards that may impact their community (flooding, tornadoes, chemicals, etc.)

Emergency planning resources for families are available on the Ready Iowa website. www.beready.iowa.gov

Federal Information:

Federal Office of Inspector General (OIG) Releases Survey to Child Care Providers

The Office of Inspector General for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services is conducting a study on the Child Care and Development Fund (CCDF) subsidy program, a Federal-State partnership that provides eligible, low-income families with help paying for child care. States may operate their CCDF subsidy programs at the local or County level, and refer to the programs by different names, which may not include the term "CCDF." For this study, we are examining the adequacy of States' subsidy payment rates and how these rates compare to prices charged by child care providers.

1,000 providers have randomly been selected from a list of child care providers across the country to assist with this important study by completing a survey on child care services. The survey questions focus on descriptive information about your child care program, your charges for care, and your experiences with your States' CCDF subsidy program, if applicable. Please be assured that no individual child care providers will be named in our study report. Answers will be combined with other responses to the survey to provide valuable information to improve the CCDF program.

Family Engagement Simulation

Parent, family, and community engagement simulation: Boosting school readiness through an effective family engagement series

What you do and say matters! Explore and practice everyday strategies to develop positive goal-oriented relationships with a family. These relationships are key to our work with children and families, including the journey toward school readiness. See a new simulation on Talking with Families about Developmental Concerns.

- Simulation 1 allows you to practice building bonds with families, beginning with an intake visit.
- Simulation 2 explores the process of developing and implementing goals with families.
- Simulation 3 explores using strengths-based attitudes to partner with families during challenging times.
- Simulation 4 helps you talk with families about developmental concerns.

Promising Snapshot: High-Hispanic serving ECE centers fare well on indicators of quality

A new brief from the National Research Center on Hispanic Children and Families (NRCHCF) has found that early care and education (ECE) centers serving high proportions of Hispanic kids measure as well—if not better— than their counterparts on key indicators of quality. These ECE centers reported more curriculum use, support services, and specialists on staff. Read the brief to see what works to make these centers high-quality places of learning.

The Smart Start (North Carolina) Resource Guide of Evidence-Based and Evidence-Informed Programs and Practices

“Across the nation there is an increasing focus on the use of evidence-based practices.[1] This movement is across federal agencies such as the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA),[2] and the Department of Education,[3] as well as across various fields such as medicine, mental health, and early childhood[4-6]. Research and practice in the field of early childhood are growing to help professionals provide the best services possible to produce real change.

“This guide is intended to provide the research evidence for programs and practices most commonly funded by Smart Start partnerships and primary evidence-based early childhood programs.

“Although this is not a “how-to” guide for doing community planning and systems building, program development, program implementation, and evaluation, these are essential elements for successful services.”

Is subsidized childcare associated with lower risk of grade retention for low-income children?

Evidence from Child Care and Development Fund administrative records linked to the American Community Survey.

This study investigates whether low-income young children's experience of Child Care and Development Fund (CCDF)-subsidized childcare is associated with a lower subsequent likelihood of being held back in grades K-12. High-quality childcare has been shown to improve low-income children's school readiness. However, no previous study has examined the link specifically between subsidized care and grade retention. I do so here by matching information on children from CCDF administrative records to later observations of the same children in the American Community Survey (ACS). I use logistic regression to compare the likelihood of grade retention between CCDF-recipient children and non-recipient children who also appear in the ACS in the years 2008-2014 (N=2,284,857). I find strong evidence for an association between CCDF-subsidized care and lower risk of grade retention, especially among non-Hispanic Black children and Hispanic children. I also find evidence that receiving CCDF-subsidized center-based care in particular is associated with a lower risk of being held back than CCDF-subsidized family daycare, babysitter care, or relative care, again with the largest apparent benefit to non-Hispanic Black children and Hispanic children. (author abstract)
