PRAMS releases first databook

Since 2011, IDPH has worked in conjunction with the CDC on the Pregnancy Risk Assessment Survey (PRAMS), with data collection beginning in 2013. Since that time, more than 5,000 Iowa mothers have provided information about their experiences and behaviors before, during, and after pregnancy. This data is compiled in the first PRAMS databook of births to Iowa women in calendar year 2013. I encourage you to read this report for useful data regarding demographics of Iowa mothers, pregnancy intention, prenatal care visits, oral health, stress before and during pregnancy, receipt of the flu shot, breastfeeding, infant sleep position and environment, intimate partner violence, mental health care, and more.

Public health heroes

The University of Iowa College of Public Health's 2015 Iowa Public Health Heroes are being awarded this week and I'm pleased to share two of the recipients are IDPH alumni. Dr. Russell Currier, DVM, MPH, of Clive, Iowa, is executive vice president of the American College of Veterinary Preventive Medicine. During Dr. Currier's 29-year tenure at IDPH, he pioneered Community Health Needs Assessment and Health Improvement Planning. Also being honored is Jeneane Moody, MPH, of Des Moines, Iowa, executive director of the Iowa Public Health Association (IPHA). We're proud Ms. Moody began her public health career with IDPH in 2001, serving as a community health consultant until 2005. She has been executive director of IPHA since 2004.

Recognized along with Dr. Currier and Ms. Moody are Gerald Edgar of Garner, Iowa, environmental health and safety officer for Mitas Tires North America; and Jodi Tomlonvic, MPA, of Des Moines, Iowa, executive director of the Family Planning Council of Iowa. These four leaders' contributions cross a range of disciplines helping to promote better health and prevent disease throughout the state of Iowa.

Parents as teachers

Deb Weilage, a local Parent Educator at FAMILY Inc. in Council Bluffs, has been named the Parents as Teachers 2015 Parent Educator of the Year. Deb is part of Iowa's family support program – an effort which IDPH fully supports. The program provides parenting information and support to local families throughout pregnancy until their child enters Kindergarten. In Deb's eight years as a Parent Educator at FAMILY Inc., she has enrolled 59 families and has provided 3,445 home visits. Her commitment to ensuring the best possible outcomes for all families and children is evident in her daily actions.
