2020 US CENSUS

Everyone Should Be Counted, But How?

"The answer to who the decennial census counts is relatively simple—it counts everyone. It's not so simple, though, to answer: How does the census count everyone? The 'who' includes every person who resides in the country. The 'how' deals with what questions are asked and by which methods.

The U.S. Constitution requires that every 'person' be counted. Just how the government goes about that changes from one census to the next. The upcoming 2020 census will be no exception to the rule because it will include both minor and some major changes."

Advocates worry housing issues may lead to an Asian-American census undercount

Obtaining a full count is crucial because census data is used to decide how $675 billion in federal funds is distributed each year.

Figures from a 2017 report by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) show that homelessness among Asian Americans has been rising: From 2016 to 2017, that group experienced the highest growth in homelessness among all racial groups (44 percent), followed by African-Americans, who saw a 23 percent increase.

CULTURE & ART

The Chinese-Born Doctor Who Brought Tofu to America

Dr. Yamei Kin was a scientific prodigy who promoted the Chinese art of living to U.S. audiences. "Kin was something of a celebrity"... "with much fanfare in the press, she had embarked on a tour of China to investigate the culinary uses of tofu, with a headline in the June 10, 1917, edition of The Sunday New York Times Magazine proclaiming, 'Woman Off to China as Government Agent to Study Soy Bean: Dr. Kin Will Make Report for United States on the Most Useful Food of Her Native Land."

Firstborn Asians feel added pressure with family responsibilities

When compared to European Americans, Asian-American firstborns feel the additional burden of being cultural brokers and having to take care of their immigrant parents and young siblings at the same time, says a University of Michigan researcher.
