PREFACE

This compilation of Basic Books and Periodicals in Home Economics represents the work of the Committee on Criteria for Home Economics of the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities. Through the able assistance of Dr. Charles H. Brown, Librarian, Iowa State College and President of the American Library Association, a method for the qualitative study of home economics library facilities was developed.

The Committee hopes that the compilation may prove a valuable guide to member institutions of the Association in evaluating the present library facilities for work in home economics at the undergraduate level. The Committee is also indebted to Iowa State College and its president, Dr. Charles E. Friley, for making it possible to present this list in printed form so that it will be more available to librarians and home economics administrators of other colleges and universities.

This study is based on books and periodicals available prior to January 1, 1942. It is hoped that the Land Grant College Association will make plans for keeping this study up to date at regular intervals.

INTRODUCTION

The various lists of books recommended for college and university libraries quite commonly exclude the subject of home economics as organized and taught by colleges, divisions and departments of home economics. The American Library Association has issued an excellent List of Books for College Libraries compiled by Charles B. Shaw, but this list is intended primarily for the liberal arts college and gives little assistance in the fields of applied science which are of major importance in land grant universities and colleges.

For this reason the Iowa State College Library considers it an opportunity to aid in the compilation of a list of "best books" for undergraduate instruction in home economics.

The method of selection was not essentially different from the method adopted by Mr. Shaw in the compilation mentioned above. The lists of books on reserve for home economics classes in the libraries of the five cooperating institutions were submitted to the Committee in the fall of 1940. The titles on these lists were sorted into nine large subject classes and sent to the five institutions to be rated by the members of their home economics staffs.

At the same time, supplementary lists of important and desirable titles were submitted by each institution. These supplementary lists were rated by the cooperating institutions in the spring of 1941 and combined with the original list.

The following values were given to each institutional rating:

Essential	= 2
Desirable	= 1

All titles with a composite rating of less than 4 have been eliminated and the original total of nearly 2700 entries reduced to less than 1300 titles, exclusive of duplications.

By decision of the Committee, all books recommended which bear 1940 or 1941 imprint dates have been included regardless of rating. A few books of obvious significance which have been published since the original lists were compiled have also been added, but a thorough coverage of 1941 publications was not possible. In general, the books and periodicals on this list have been approved by at least three institutions.

The best possible rating is 10. All titles given a rating of 9 or 10 are presented in a list of Essential Titles preceding the main lists. It is hoped that this list of 103 books and 33 periodicals will be a helpful buying guide for institutions with small home economics collections, and for the smaller public libraries.

Two special lists have been added. The first, a list of Reference Books, was compiled by the reference staff of the Iowa State College Library, with the assistance of suggestions from some of the cooperating institutions. The second, a list of High School Textbooks, was selected by the Committee. High school textbooks recommended for inclusion in the main subject list are designated (HT) in the main list. Other high school texts are included only in the separate list. Titles designated as textbooks or supplementary textbooks at one or more of the cooperating institutions are indicated in the main list by (CT).

A word of explanation about the classification of the subject bibliographies may be desirable. Unfortunately the courses of instruction in the various schools of home economics are organized on widely different bases. The classification selected—somewhat arbitrarily, perhaps—is based on the departmental organization of the Division of Home Economics at Iowa State College. Under this scheme, material on the family, household economics, and consumption will, in general, be found under the heading "Home Management". A number of titles on family relationships, however, were specifically recommended for inclusion on the Child Development list, and some material on consumer education and buying will be found under Foods and Nutrition and Textiles and Clothing. In future revisions of this bibliography, greater subdivision of the large subject classes will undoubtedly be desirable.

Titles considered important for two teaching departments have been included on two lists. Duplication has occurred chiefly between Applied Art and Textiles.

It should be remembered that, because of the lack of material in book form, many articles in current periodicals are used as assigned readings in home economics subjects. It would obviously not be feasible to include these individual articles, but the most important current periodicals, yearbooks and monograph series have been listed under each subject.

Most of the publications listed are books rather than bulletins or individual numbers of monograph series. However, in Household Equipment, for which little material has been published in book form, a number of individual experiment station bulletins have been recommended. Although experiment station publications have otherwise not been specifically enumerated, it is scarcely necessary to point out that they are valuable for many phases of home economics instruction.

The essential bibliographic information to identify each entry is given: author, title, publisher, place and date. In addition, the price is appended for books which appear to be in print. The latest edition and the latest reprint are cited in preference to the original publications, particularly when the original editions are no longer available from the publishers. Similarly, the American publisher, if any, is given in preference to the English publisher except when the American edition is out of print and the English edition is still listed for sale in the Reference Catalogue of Current Literature for 1940.

Miss Helen Crawford of the staff of the Iowa State College Library is responsible for the classification and editing of this list. The citations originally received were, of course, incomplete, and in many cases difficult to verify. No one except a bibliographer can appreciate the amount of work required in verification and editing.

In spite of the care exercised, undoubtedly errors have crept in. The Library will appreciate notes of omissions and errors, as well as suggestions for changes in format and classification. It is expected that supplements will be issued from time to time and that eventually an entire revision of the present list will be necessary. It should be remembered that this is the first attempt, so far as is known, to compile a selected bibliography of the whole field of home economics. There is, therefore, little precedent to guide the compiler in the organization and presentation of the material.

It is believed that the list will be useful to public libraries as well as to college libraries. A list of the important literature in the diverse fields of home economics should be of considerable value to many colleges and universities whether they offer instruction in home economics or not.
