Iowa Automotive Products Recycling Directory

The Land Quality and Waste Management Assistance Division of the Department of Natural Resources is pleased to present to you the Iowa Automotive Products Recycling Directory. The locations and companies listed in this directory are willing to assist you with the proper disposal of used oil, used oil filters, anti-freeze and lead acid batteries. The information in this directory and for many other products is also available at www.1800claenup.org or by calling 1-800-cleanup.

This fourth edition contains over 700 location across the state of Iowa for do-it-yourselfers to recycle their used automotive products. We are pleased and grateful that so many business, landfills and recyclers have volunteered to serve as collection sites.

Used Oil

Motor oil doesn't wear out, it just gets dirty. As it lubricates your engine it picks up a variety of contaminants and needs to be replaced.

When disposed of improperly, used oil can poison fish and kill aquatic plants. Never pour used oil down any type of drain, into a sanitary sewer or onto the ground. One pint of oil can form a slick as big as a football field on a lake or pond.

Chapter 455D.13 of the code of Iowa prohibits final disposal of oil in a landfill. If a landfill liner leaks the oil could leach out and contaminate the ground water. In addition, any retailer selling oil must either accept waste oil from customers or post notice of locations that will accept used oil. For a free sign please return the order form on page 105.

What happens to the used oil I bring in for recycling?

Used oil is recycled in several ways. It can be re-refined by removing contaminants and water and returned to use as a lubricating oil. Re-refined Oil displaying the API "Donut" or ILSAC starburst meets the same certification as virgin motor oil. Used oil can also be reprocessed into fuel to heat homes or generate electricity. Two gallons of used motor oil can provide enough electricity run the average household for about a day. Used oil can also be used in specially designed space heaters. (Not recommended for home use)

Used Oil filters

Even after a filter has been drained for several hours, several ounces of oil remains trapped in the filter. This oil may leach out and contaminate ground or surface water.

What happens to the used oil filters I bring in to be recycled?

The filter is either crushed and heated to a high temperature to remove the oil for recycling or it is shredded. The scrap metal is sent to smelters where it is used in steel products, which saves four times as much energy as virgin iron ore and conserves natural resources.

How to recycle your used oil and used oil filters

First drain the oil from your car and remove the filter from the vehicle. Allow the free flowing oil to drain from the filter.

Carefully puncture a hole in the dome end of the filter through the anti-drain back valve. Puncturing the filter breaks the vacuum and allows much of the trapped oil to drain out. Turn the filter upside down and drain as much oil as possible. For best results drain for a minimum of 12 hours at room temperature.

Pour the oil into a clean container with a tight fitting lid. Original motor oil containers work well for this. Never use containers that once held chemicals, household cleaners such as bleach, gasoline or solvent. The residues in these containers can contaminate the oil. If you do not bring it in right away, store out of the reach of children and label "used oil". Take the container and the filter to one of business listed in this book for recycling.

Lead-Acid Batteries

Lead-acid batteries contain an average of 17.5 pounds of lead and 1.5 gallons of sulfuric acid. Improperly disposed lead-acid batteries can corrode and release lead and sulfuric acid. The lead and sulfuric acid which seep into the ground and contaminate the soil and the ground water. Leaking lead-acid batteries disposed in household trash also pose a danger to refuse collectors.

State law has prohibited land disposal of lead-acid batteries since 1990. Retailers are required to accept a used battery in exchange when a new one is purchased. The retailers listed in this directory are willing to accept lead-acid batteries even when one is not purchased. Retailers selling lead-acid batteries are required to post a sign. For a free sign please return the order form on page 105.

What happens to my battery when it is recycled?

Lead smelters purchase used lead-acid batteries for lead recovery. Lead-acid batteries commonly contain 65 to 70 percent recycled lead.

Used Antifreeze

The main chemical in antifreeze is ethylene glycol a deadly but sweet tasting poison. Because of its sweet taste wildlife and pets are attracted to puddles of antifreeze spilled on the driveway. As little as two ounces can kill a dog and only two tablespoons is hazardous to a child. The American Association of Poison Control Centers reports about 3,400 poisonings due to ethylene glycol each year, 20% of these are children under age six. Always store used or unused antifreeze out of the reach of children and pets and never store used antifreeze in a container that once held a beverage.

Used antifreeze also picks up heavy metals from the engine and possibly benzene if fuel leaks into the cooling system. Antifreeze needs to be recycled or disposed of properly to prevent accidental poisonings and groundwater contamination.

A safer alternative to traditional antifreeze is made with propylene glycol, however it still picks up heavy metals and should be disposed of properly.

Other Hazardous Materials

Do you have other hazardous materials such as pesticides, gas, paint thinner, oven cleaner and other household hazardous materials you would like to get rid of? Regional Collection Centers accept hazardous materials from households, farms and conditionally exempt small businesses. A list of these is on page 100.

Business Waste

If you have a business that generates used oil, used oil filters, antifreeze or batteries that you would like to recycle please see the list of transporters and processors on page 101.

For other hazardous materials conditional exempt small quantity generators as defined by the EPA are encouraged to use one of the regional collection centers listed on page 100. If your business is a small quantity generator or large quantity generator, the hazardous waste management companies listed on page 103 will be able to dispose of your materials properly.

Collection sites

The following pages contain a list of sites that accept small quantities of automotive products from do-it-yourself mechanics. A check in the fee column indicates the business charges a fee for this service. Only sites that accept lead-acid batteries when one is not purchased are listed. All retailers selling lead-acid batteries are required to accept a used one when one is purchased.

These lists are subject to change and will be updated periodically. They are also available on the divisions web site at www.iowadnr.wmad.org. We appreciate your help in keeping this list up to date. If you have any corrections, additions or deletions please fill out the form in the back of this book.

Every effort has been made to verify the information provided in each entry. No warranty, expresses or implied, and no endorsement of any facility, business, organization or individual is suggested by inclusion or exclusion in this directory.

CONTAINS: TRACE METALS, CHLORINATED SOLVENTS, GASOLINE, POLYNUCLEAR AROMATIC HYDROCARBONS, GLYCOLS AND PCBS. Avoid repeated or prolonged contact. Do not take internally. IF SWALLOWED: Call a physician or Poison Control Center immediately.

IF YOU DISPOSE OF YOUR HOUSEHOLD CHEMICALS IMPROPERLY, THEY COULD END UP IN THE WRONG PACKAGE.

This label is from a can of motor oil. Does this look like motor oil? Improper use storage or disposal of this and other chemicals such as gasoline, paints, thinners, and pesticides can cause leaching directly into the groundwater - polluting Iowa's major drinking supply. Ultimately, this puts these same dangerous chemicals where they don't belong.

Collection Sites

A check indicates that the material is accepted for recycling, if there is also a check under fee, there is a small fee for this service. For instance, Harkins in Adair accepts used oil for free, but does not accept used oil filters, antifreeze, or lead-acid batteries
